The role of technology in disaster response and preparedness.
A personal story

On Thursday July 7th 2005 I was travelling on the tube in London when a suicide bomber detonated an improvised explosive device a few metres away from me. While many weren't as fortunate, I survived.

I helped create an online platform for survivors to connect, share, and support each other through recovery. Now, I support global platforms that unite people from across the world like London, Manchester, Boston, Somalia, Canada, and Ukraine and many others.
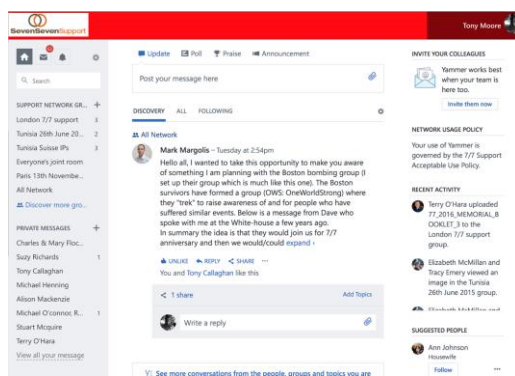

This is a story of how technology in many ways can make us more human

- London 7/7 2005
- Resilience
- Disaster response and preparedness

- My journey to the Whitehouse
- How technology can bring people together
- Scaling globally and what's next

London 7/7 2005

Technology for good

Disaster response

Resilience

The Whitehouse

Learnings, looking ahead

20-40 mins